

HERE, BOY, PAGE A DOCTOR— JENNY IS SICK!

The sob writer, with a far-away expression in her eyes, was endeavoring to imitate the trill of a bird, though in a much modified manner.

The city editor scowled. "It isn't possible today," he said. "We are already short a reporter, and you know Monday is a heavy day. I am sure if you try really hard you can manage to get through the day."

"What are you talking about?" asked the s. w. innocently, thus interrupting the trill.

"Your apparent illness that is expressing itself in those groaning noises. Usually when you want to go home and enjoy yourself you look at me like a dying calf and tell me in a whisper that there will be a funeral unless I chase you right out, but you are apparently changing your tactics."

"I do not yet get your drift," said the s. w., "but if you are referring to my imitation of a trill of a bird it was complimented yesterday by my friends."

The c. e. looked relieved, and the s. w., encouraged, thereby proceeded.

"I was out in the country yesterday. It was ideal. The young tender grass is so green and the first of the early summer flowers are making their appearance. The sky was that deep azure hue that one finds only in the month of June, and the roads seemed as though they had bathed and combed their hair, which is the fringe of grass by the roadside, just that they might greet the morn."

"In the trees and flitting over the grass were the song birds, singing their hymns of praise to the fair day. I stretched out my arms to them and I drank in the pure ozone, and I imitated the warble of the birds and some of them, it seemed, answered me back again, and the world seemed far off, and only the beautiful out of doors and the beautiful things of the out of doors and I were alone."

The c. e. held up his hand, thus beckoning the copy boy to him.

"Take Jenny home," he said, "she is sick."

TWO MORE ALIBI LETTERS IN ORPET CASE EXPECTED

The alibi letters written by Will Orpet and presumed to be the state's strongest evidence against the university student, charged with the murder of Marion Lambert, may be increased to three, as Otto Peterson, with whom Orpet left the matters to be mailed, claims there were that number.

Only one of the alibi letters is in possession of State's Att'y Dady. That is the one addressed to Marion Lambert, which arrived at the Lake Forest postoffice on Feb. 8, the day she met her death, and was received by her father the next morning.

Peterson, who was a chum of Orpet's, says that on Feb. 7, two days before Marian Lambert's death, Orpet handed him three letters which he said he had written that afternoon.

"I want you to do me a favor," he said. "I am going on a little visit to Lake Forest. My mother and father have forbidden me to come home and I don't want them to know that I have left college. I want you to drop these three letters into the postoffice after I have gone."

"I paid little attention to the addresses on the envelopes. I know that one was addressed to Marion Lambert. I remember that another was addressed to some Orpet, but whether to Mr. or Mrs. Orpet I cannot say. I do not know to whom the third letter was addressed. If I read the address of this letter I have forgotten it."

Orpet's father took the stand again at the opening of court today.
